In line with this progressive vision, Lloyd proposes a Faculty Development Program (FDP) on "Reimagining Higher Education with the Indian Knowledge Systems."

ABOUT FDP

The concept of Indian Knowledge Systems has gained significant traction, particularly after its inclusion in the National Education Policy (NEP) 2020. The policy emphasizes the integration of IKS into school and higher education curricula, underscoring the importance of India's rich and diverse knowledge traditions—both ancient and contemporary.

This FDP aims to empower educators with insights into traditional wisdom, enabling them to enrich curricula, enhance teaching methodologies, and foster a deeper connection between heritage and modern education. By integrating IKS into higher education, educators can offer students a holistic, value-based learning experience that blends time-honored knowledge with contemporary advancements.

The program will explore practical ways to incorporate the IKS model into modern educational frameworks, paving the way for a well-rounded, sustainable, and inclusive learning environment.

OBJECTIVES

1. To introduce faculty members to the principles and pedagogical models of IKS.
2. To explore innovative teaching methods rooted in IKS, such as storytelling, experiential learning and dialogic teaching.
3. To integrate sustainability, ethics and holistic education within the curriculum using IKS frameworks.
4. To enhance student engagement through values-based and interactive pedagogical techniques.
5. To foster a sense of cultural pride and awareness amongst delegates.
6. To align with institute's mission of creating an environment of continuous upgradation in higher education to meet professional, economic and social standards.
